

Humans are not sustainable. We were not built to last.
No matter how infrequent our meals may be, we still eat of the earth.
No matter how unquenched our thirst may go, we still drink of the sea.
“I’m here for a good time, not a long time”

Humans could be sustainable. We can make changes that last.
Our meals may be often, but plant life will be depleted far less than animals.
Our drinks may be plenty, but we can recycle the water we’ve already used.
“I’m doing my part”

Humans sustain. We have eternal influence.
Our meals matter not, we eat because we must.
Our drinks matter not, to imbibe is to be alive.
“Eh, I reckon it’ll all blow over soon.”

The truth is that it doesn't matter which of those you believe.
The water is dwindling and your beliefs won’t change that.
It’s drifting away in the wind. Reach up and grab it please; we’re not tall enough yet.
