

Tomorrowland

I have dreams of a place called 'Tomorrow' save for the light of day, I chase the things written in the morrow
Its golden gates stay laced within the corners of my mind
It's idea made to replace all the wrongs of mankind

Tomorrow unearths long-buried dreams
Brought in birth by the youth that childhood brings

Tomorrow, yet not a world set in stone
But a thought twirled in the mind of man, to walk a path unknown
Brought forth from the hearts that beat a thousand drums
Called for by the lots, soon departs nature's child, countless in sum

Little mankind, the ones unburdened by truth
Fickle and blind, is now to foster the youth

The promised, tomorrow, lies at the edge of today
It hides in the plainest sight, clearer than day
In the knowledge of man, the first of its kind
Tomorrow exists with the earth, soul, heart, and Mind
